

“I want to feel in control of my health without making my life more complicated.”

The Reluctant Planner

NAME	ALEX
AGE	30-55	GENDER	FEMALE
LOCATION	USA
JOB	FULL-TIME	INCOME	$100,000 - $500,000

Alex lives in a shared environment where food decisions don't just affect them—they affect everyone around them. Whether it's a partner, kids, or even just coordinating life with another adult, Alex is the one who ends up responsible for what gets eaten. They're the person who gets asked, "What are we having?" and the one who notices when groceries are low or when there's no plan in place. Even if others occasionally help, Alex carries the mental load of making sure it all comes together.

At the start of the week, things usually feel manageable. Groceries are bought, there's a loose plan, and motivation is higher. But as the week goes on, real life takes over. Schedules get busy, energy drops, and the plan starts to fall apart. Midweek turns into figuring things out on the fly—throwing something together, repeating the same meals, or defaulting to takeout. By the end of the week, it's more about getting through than sticking to any kind of structure.

A big source of friction is that not everyone in the household wants the same things. Preferences, routines, and expectations don't always align, which makes it hard for Alex to simply focus on their own goals. When they try to eat better or follow a plan for themselves, it often creates more work—separate meals, adjustments, or compromises that aren't sustainable. Over time, it's easier to just go with what works for everyone else, even if it means putting their own needs on the back burner.

Food isn't a major source of conflict, but it's a constant background pressure. It shows up as low-level stress, occasional guilt, and the feeling of always having to think one step ahead. Alex wants to do better—for themselves and for the people they care about—but the current way of doing things makes consistency feel harder than it should be.

BEHAVIOR AND PERSONALITY

MOTIVATION:

- Want relief from constant decision-making
- Want to feel in control of their health and routine
- Want a solution supporting the whole family without taking over life

STRUGGLE

- Constantly thinking about food
- Constant mental load
- Consistency struggle
- Frustrated with food & “dieting”

DESIRED OUTCOME

- A clear plan that’s easy to execute
 - Meals are handled
 - Groceries are handled
 - They don’t have to plan everything from scratch
- To feel:
 - In control
 - Consistent
 - Clear on next steps
- A practical plan that:
 - Adapts to their schedule
 - Supports their household without a “special diet life”
- Emotionally:
 - Feels in control and less stressed

DECISION MAKING

THEY SAY YES WHEN THEY BELIEVE:

- “This will actually simplify my life”
- “I don’t have to figure everything out myself”
- “I can stick to this”

THEY SAY NO WHEN THEY THINK:

- “This is just another diet”
- “This will be too much work”
- “I won’t keep up with it”

THEY AREN’T

THEY WANT LESS INVOLVEMENT, NOT MORE.

THEY ARE NOT:

- hardcore fitness people
- macro trackers
- people who enjoy planning food
- people looking to “optimize everything”

JOURNEY

AWARENESS STAGE	Becoming aware of the issue. Someone they knew lost weight with MacroFit. See progress pictures.
CONSIDERATION STAGE	How expensive is it? What’s the trick? How does this make my life easier?
DECISION TRIGGERS	Recipes look like my kids/parents/spouse/partner will eat them. The grocery list is done for me. I don’t have to make so many decisions. I don’t have to give up my ... [favorite food item]
POST-PURCHASE BEHAVIOR	Overwhelmed by learning something new. Excited to try. Nervous about making mistakes. Not sure what to pick. Excited to have new things to try. Join the community and see what people are saying.
LOYALTY DRIVERS	New recipes. Personal results. Individualized experience. Easy to use. Enjoy being a part of the community. Like “knowing” Chelsea. They have more time for other things because this makes their lives easier.
CURRENT VIEW OF YOUR COMPETITORS	Have tried other things. No results or couldn’t keep up with it.
DESIRED BRAND EXPERIENCE	Heard, seen, celebrated! Want to feel connected. Sleek and clean aesthetic.

“I need to take control of my health so I can be there for the people I care about.”

The Breaking Point

NAME	DAN
AGE	40-70	GENDER	MALE*
		LOCATION	USA
JOB	FULL-TIME / SKILLED PROFESSIONAL / BLUE COLLAR / MANAGEMENT		INCOME
			$80,000 - $250,000

Dan hasn't always focused on his health. It was something he knew he probably "should" care about, but there was never enough urgency to truly change his habits or routines. Life was busy, the consequences didn't feel immediate, and it was easy to put off taking it seriously.

Then something shifted. Maybe it was a doctor's appointment, concerning lab results, rising blood pressure, a health scare, or realizing he could no longer enjoy activities the way he used to because of his weight or health. What was once easy started feeling harder. Energy dropped. Physical limitations became more noticeable. The issue stopped feeling hypothetical and became real.

For Dan, this isn't about aesthetics or becoming a fitness person. It's about avoiding serious consequences and staying healthy enough to continue showing up for the people who depend on him. There's often a mix of fear, responsibility, and frustration underneath the surface, especially if he's tried making changes before and struggled to stay consistent.

He doesn't want extreme diets, complicated systems, or unrealistic expectations. He wants something practical that gives him a clear direction forward without making life harder or forcing him to completely change who he is. Most importantly, he wants confidence that the effort he's putting in now will actually matter long term.

At the same time, there's uncertainty. Part of him worries he'll fall back into old habits once the initial motivation fades. He's looking for a system that feels manageable enough to sustain, but effective enough to help him feel like he's finally taking control before it's too late.

MOTIVATION:

- Want to avoid serious health consequences
- Want to feel healthier and more capable
- Want to stay present for the people they care about
- Want confidence that they are finally taking control
- Want a realistic path forward that actually feels sustainable

STRUGGLE

- Overwhelmed by conflicting nutrition advice
- Intimidated by extreme fitness culture
- Know they need to change, but aren't sure what will actually stick
- Don't want their health to continue declining

DESIRED OUTCOME

- A clear, practical system that:
 - Removes confusion
 - Feels manageable
 - Supports long-term health improvement
 - Fits into real life without extreme restriction
- To feel:
 - In control
 - Consistent
 - Clear on next steps
- Emotionally:
 - Less afraid
 - Less overwhelmed
 - Proud they finally took action
 - Hopeful that lasting change is possible

DECISION MAKING

THEY SAY YES WHEN THEY BELIEVE:

- "This feels realistic"
- "I know what to do"
- "This could actually work long term"
- "I don't have to overhaul my entire life"
- "I can still enjoy life while improving my health"

THEY SAY NO WHEN THEY THINK:

- "This is too extreme"
- "This feels like another fad"
- "I'll never stick with this"
- "This is too complicated"

THEY AREN'T

THEY WANT CLARITY, NOT COMPLEXITY.

THEY ARE NOT:

- Hardcore fitness people
- Bodybuilders
- People chasing aesthetics first
- Macro experts
- Looking for perfection
- Interested in restrictive diets
- Looking for rapid transformation gimmicks

JOURNEY

AWARENESS STAGE	A health issue becomes real. Doctor warnings. Lab results. Low energy. Physical limitations. Realizing he can't keep doing things the same way. Seeing people around him struggle with serious health issues.
CONSIDERATION STAGE	Will this actually improve my health long term? Can I actually stick with this? Is this realistic? How difficult is this going to be?
DECISION TRIGGERS	A clear structure and direction. Realistic expectations. Seeing other people improve their health sustainably. Simplicity. Feeling like this works in real life without extreme restriction. Confidence that he does not have to become a "fitness person" to succeed.
POST-PURCHASE BEHAVIOR	Highly motivated initially. Nervous about failing again. Wants reassurance that he's doing things correctly. Looks for progress quickly. May overcommit early because fear is driving action. Wants structure and clarity.
LOYALTY DRIVERS	Feeling physically better. More energy. Simplicity. Sustainable progress. Clear structure. Confidence in the system. Reduced fear around health. Feeling capable again. Realizing he can still enjoy life while improving his health.
CURRENT VIEW OF YOUR COMPETITORS	Too extreme. Too confusing. Too restrictive. Too focused on aesthetics instead of long-term health. Feels unrealistic for normal life. Too much misinformation and conflicting advice.
DESIRED BRAND EXPERIENCE	Straightforward. Trustworthy. Encouraging without judgment. Clear. Practical. Supportive. Honest. Sustainable. No hype or gimmicks.

“What used to work doesn’t work anymore, and I need a way to feel healthy and in control again.”

The Adapting Body

NAME	MICHELLE
AGE	25-55	GENDER	FEMALE
		LOCATION	USA
JOB	FULL-TIME / PART-TIME / CAREGIVER / PROFESSIONAL		INCOME	$120,000 - $250,000

Michelle is not new to dieting, nutrition, or trying to take care of herself. In many cases, she’s successfully lost weight before, followed structured plans, worked out consistently, or had routines that once felt manageable. The frustration is not that nothing has ever worked—it’s that her life and body no longer respond the same way they used to.

Changes in hormones, age, stress, schedule, recovery, energy levels, or responsibilities have shifted what feels realistic and sustainable. What once felt simple now feels exhausting. The methods that previously produced results may still technically “work,” but they require a level of restriction, time, energy, or rigidity that no longer fits this stage of life.

For Michelle, this creates confusion and discouragement. She feels like she should know what to do because she’s done it before, but the old approaches are harder to maintain and don’t deliver results the way they once did. There’s often frustration around slowing progress, changing metabolism, weight distribution, energy levels, or simply feeling disconnected from her own body.

She’s not looking for an extreme transformation or another highly restrictive plan. She wants a realistic system that adapts with her life instead of fighting against it. Most importantly, she wants to feel confident that she can still make progress without having to completely revolve her life around dieting, tracking, or perfection.

At the same time, there’s grief in realizing that old habits, routines, or expectations may no longer fit. Michelle is looking for a healthier, more sustainable relationship with food, health, and consistency—one that supports this phase of life instead of making her feel like she’s constantly failing it.

MOTIVATION:

- Feel comfortable in their body again
- Find an approach that fits this stage of life
- Build sustainable consistency instead of cycling through restriction and burnout
- Feel healthier, stronger, and more capable
- Regain confidence that progress is still possible

STRUGGLE

- What worked before no longer feels realistic
- Progress feels slower and harder than it used to
- Tired of starting over repeatedly
- Changing hormones, metabolism, recovery, or energy levels create frustration
- Balancing self-care with responsibilities and real life feels difficult
- Fear that their body is no longer responding the way it once did

DESIRED OUTCOME

- A flexible, sustainable system that:
 - Works with changing life demands
 - Supports long-term consistency
 - Removes guilt and overwhelm
 - Feels realistic to maintain
- To feel:
 - Healthier
 - More confident
 - More comfortable in their body
 - More in control of their habits and health
- Emotionally:
 - Less frustrated
 - Less discouraged
 - More hopeful
 - More trusting of themselves again

DECISION MAKING

THEY SAY YES WHEN THEY BELIEVE:

- “This doesn’t restrict my lifestyle”
- “I don’t have to be perfect”
- “This works with my lifestyle instead of against it”
- “I can still make progress without extremes”
- “I finally feel understood”

THEY SAY NO WHEN THEY THINK:

- “This is too restrictive”
- “This feels unrealistic for my life”
- “I don’t have the energy for this”
- “This is just another unsustainable diet”

THEY AREN’T

THEY WANT ADAPTATION, NOT RESTRICTION.

THEY ARE NOT:

- Looking for rapid transformation
- Interested in extreme dieting
- Trying to become a fitness influencer
- Obsessed with optimization
- Looking for punishment or restriction
- Interested in all-or-nothing approaches

JOURNEY

AWARENESS STAGE	What used to work no longer feels sustainable. Weight gain feels easier. Energy feels lower. Recovery is slower. Hormonal changes, aging, stress, or life demands make old methods harder to maintain. Realizing this is not just a temporary phase.
CONSIDERATION STAGE	Do I need a different approach? Is this realistic for my life right now? Can I still make progress without going to extremes? Will this help me stay consistent long term?
DECISION TRIGGERS	A sustainable approach. Flexibility. Realistic expectations. Feeling understood instead of judged. A system that adapts to real life and changing needs. Seeing people in similar life stages succeed without extreme restriction.
POST-PURCHASE BEHAVIOR	Hopeful but cautious. Wants reassurance that this approach will feel manageable. May second-guess progress if results feel slower than in the past. Appreciates guidance, encouragement, and realistic expectations.
LOYALTY DRIVERS	Consistency without burnout. Feeling physically better. Better relationship with food. Sustainable progress. Reduced guilt. Feeling more in control and less frustrated with her body. A system that works with her lifestyle instead of against it.
CURRENT VIEW OF YOUR COMPETITORS	Too restrictive. Too intense. Built for younger people or unrealistic lifestyles. Focused on fast transformation instead of sustainability. Feels disconnected from the realities of aging, hormones, stress, or busy life stages.
DESIRED BRAND EXPERIENCE	Supportive. Realistic. Encouraging. Calm. Judgment-free. Honest. Sustainable. Practical. Empowering without pressure.

“I want a simpler system that helps me stay consistent without constantly thinking about the food plan.”

The Efficiency Seeker

NAME	CHRIS
AGE	28-45	GENDER	N/A
JOB	FULL-TIME / PROFESSIONAL / ENTREPRENEUR		INCOME
			$80,000 - $250,000

Chris is not new to fitness or nutrition. They've counted macros, tracked calories, meal prepped, and spent years learning how to stay lean, healthy, and physically capable. They already understand the principles and know what works.

They enjoy being active. They care about looking good, feeling confident, staying attractive, and maintaining a body that reflects the effort they put into themselves. Fitness is not just about health—it's tied to confidence, lifestyle, identity, and feeling good in their own skin.

The frustration is that staying fit feels far more complicated and time-consuming than it should be. Tracking every meal, calculating macros, planning food, and constantly thinking ahead starts to feel like unnecessary maintenance. Chris still wants the results. They want to stay lean, energetic, active, and in control of their body—but they no longer want food and fitness to require so much daily attention. Life is full, and there are other things they'd rather spend time and mental energy on: work, travel, relationships, hobbies, social events, and actually enjoying life.

Chris is looking for a smarter, more efficient system. They want structure and results without constantly managing every detail. MacroFit gives them a way to maintain the lifestyle and appearance they care about while removing the “mental Tetris” of planning and tracking everything manually.

BEHAVIOR

MOTIVATION:

- Stay lean, attractive, and physically confident
- Maintain an active lifestyle
- Reduce the time and attention required to stay fit
- Keep structure without constant tracking
- Make nutrition feel easier and more efficient

STRUGGLE

- Tracking food feels tedious and time consuming
- Constant planning and calculations become frustrating
- Fitness starts requiring too much mental attention
- Busy schedules disrupt consistency
- Traditional macro tracking feels obsessive and rigid

DESIRED OUTCOME

- A structured system that:
 - Handles the planning
 - Removes unnecessary calculations
 - Supports an active lifestyle
 - Fits naturally into real life
- To feel:
 - Healthy
 - Attractive
 - Energetic
 - Consistent without obsession
- Emotionally:
 - Less mentally occupied by food
 - More relaxed around eating
 - Confident they can maintain results
 - Free to enjoy life without constantly managing nutrition

DECISION MAKING

THEY SAY YES WHEN THEY BELIEVE:

- “This will actually simplify my life”
- “I don’t have to figure everything out myself”
- “I can stick to this”
- “Stays true to Macro methodology & science”

THEY SAY NO WHEN THEY THINK:

- “This is just another diet”
- “This will be too much work”
- “I won’t keep up with it”

THEY AREN’T

THEY WANT LESS INVOLVEMENT, NOT MORE.

THEY ARE NOT:

- Beginners who know nothing about nutrition
- People who enjoy manually tracking every detail
- Looking for restrictive or extreme dieting
- Interested in making fitness their entire lifestyle

JOURNEY

AWARENESS STAGE	Already understands macros, calorie deficits, and nutrition basics. Starts realizing the amount of time and attention required to stay fit feels excessive and frustrating. Wants a more efficient way to maintain results.
CONSIDERATION STAGE	Will this actually make my life easier? Can I maintain my current performance without tracking everything manually? Does this still give me flexibility and control? Will this fit my lifestyle without becoming another thing to manage?
DECISION TRIGGERS	The planning is done for me. I still get structure without manual tracking. Meals fit my lifestyle and preferences. I can stay fit without obsessing over food. This gives me flexibility without losing control.
POST-PURCHASE BEHAVIOR	Quickly understands the system. Excited by the efficiency and simplicity. Starts customizing meals around routines, workouts, travel, and social life. Appreciates having structure without constant calculation.
LOYALTY DRIVERS	Easy to maintain results. Less time spent thinking about food. Flexibility. Feeling attractive, healthy, and confident. Structure without obsession. Enjoying life more while still staying in shape. New recipes.
CURRENT VIEW OF YOUR COMPETITORS	Most fitness apps and macro systems require too much manual work. Tracking everything starts to feel obsessive, rigid, and unnecessarily time consuming.
DESIRED BRAND EXPERIENCE	Efficient. Clean. Modern. Flexible. Smart. Structured without being restrictive. Easy to use and integrated naturally into life.
